FlyRight Training Center Receives FAA 142 Certification

Simulator-based training center offers Kingair 200 Pilot Training

FlyRight Inc. received FAA certification today as the country's newest 142 Flight Training Center. The FAA's approval of FlyRight's training programs at the highest level of accreditation comes after 3 years of intensive program development. FlyRight's 142 Training Center certification enables the company to offer initial, ATP, and recurrent training programs entirely in-house, using its Kingair B200 and Raytheon 1900D Level-C full motion simulators.

Jim Crawford, Director of Operations for FlyRight, complimented the FAA process saying "FAA involvement in our program development has resulted in raising the bar to the higher level of operational and training effectiveness. All of our customized courseware, including curriculums, Pilot Training Manual, Quick Reference Handbook, and animated PowerPoints, were scrutinized by the local Flight Standards District Office. Their feedback enabled us to hone the program, building on all the experience of our staff and the FAA, to create a world-class training experience."

In recognition of the experience and expertise of FlyRight instructors, the FAA also certified a FlyRight instructor as a Training Center Evaluator, eliminating the requirement for FAA examiners for checkrides.

FlyRight's initial and recurrent Kingair 200 courses will begin immediately.
